MANAGEMENT COMMENT

Sovereign rates rebounded strongly over the month, especially on the short end and in particular on the volatile GBP yield curve. Central bankers (Fed, BOE, ECB) confirm that the period of high inflation will be longer. These same policymakers (Fed, ECB) believe that the markets are anticipating monetary tightening too soon. The hedging position via futures of the rising interest rate risk was beneficial for the portfolio but was subsequently reduced to limit the volatility of market sentiment versus central banks. In terms of credit, the Adler issuer generated a negative movement in the portfolio, but this was limited thanks to the spreading of risk over several maturities. The accumulation of negative news in a few days caused some holders to capitulate. And indeed the longest position was sold to reduce volatility. The issuer, which owns tangible assets in real estate, has since communicated the sale of 1.4 billion assets to LEG Immobilien and an additional 1 billion to KKR in order to reduce its leverage. In addition, its competitor Vonovia (A-/BBB+) has acquired a stake in the company. On the overall portfolio strategy, the credit duration remains low in view of the low premiums offered and a short position is maintained against the risk of rising interest rates.
