

CMB honours women in Finance

English-speaking finance academy

Building on the success of previous editions, Compagnie Monégasque de Banque is launching the 3rd Women and Finance Academy for an English-speaking female audience.

On Tuesday October 2nd, Werner Peyer, CMB's CEO, and Marie-Hélène Parisi, Director of the Academy, welcomed the students for their first course at Le Méridien in Monaco.

The academic year, organized into ten modules, has been enriched by an additional module, "Banking and Technology: the new fashion." This new module will focus on new technologies in the banking environment, including cybersecurity, Blockchain technology and cryptocurrencies.

The training courses are led by experts from the CMB, mostly women, and benefited by this year's new talent.

CMB is the first Private Bank to offer a structured initiative and an academic curriculum to its clients. By creating the Women and Finance Academy, CMB aims to enable its students to improve their financial literacy and thus achieve a higher level of autonomy on issues of wealth management and investment strategy. Marie-Hélène Parisi, director of the Women and Finance Academy, underlines the students' involvement: "their thirst for learning and their desire to understand complex mechanisms make them excellent future decision-makers." Educational sponsorship, set up by the CMB under the aegis of Werner Peyer, is part of a vast program of innovations designed to complement the Bank's service offering to clients looking to improve their financial literacy.

The CMB has developed two other flagship programs: the Academy Philanthropy, whose main objective is to help potential philanthropists to clarify their aspirations, and the Academy First Investment, in partnership with the International School of Monaco, which aims to introduce high school students to the world of finance and investment and to provide them with the basic tools and skills they will need to manage their wealth and portfolio.

www.cmb.mc

From left to right: Werner Peyer, CEO, Emma Gamerdinger, Private Banker, Marie-Hélène Parisi, Director of the Academy, and Laura Young, Equity Fund Manager